Pradhan calls for greater R&D push from pvt sector

AUHONA MUKHERJEE
New Delhi, 5 May

Education Minister Dharmendra Pradhan on Tuesday criticised India Inc's approach to research, describing the spending on corporate-social responsibility (CSR) as "tokenism" and urging companies to increase investment.

"I'm happy that a few of the Indian corporates and PSUs (public-sector undertakings) are going to be honoured here today on this platform. I'm happy and I'm grateful to all of you, but I am not satisfied. Your CSR is a tokenism," Pradhan said at the Technology Summit of the Indian Institute of Technology Madras.

"You want to put up a factory, you want to develop an office, you want to put machinery, you want to invest in human resource, then why don't you invest in research and innovation? Why don't you invest in our institutions when our institutions are capable?" he asked.

India's research ecosystem remains dependent on government support, with nearly 70 per cent of investment coming from the public sector, he added.

"This is not a good sign. The share needs to be at least half, and 50 per cent of research investment must come from industry," he said, adding that industries are not putting faith in Indian institutions and innovation. He said companies should start research funding as a core investment rather than a CSR activity, arguing that innovation spending is directly linked to long-term growth.

"China's market is its own population. Similarly, India's primary market should also be its population, plus the Global South. The Global South is depending on India for its cost-effectiveness." Pradhan questioned why companies that invest in factories, infrastructure and human resources are reluctant to back domestic research. He said industry often prefers to purchase technologies or licences developed by Indians overseas rather than fund homegrown innovation.

At the same time, the minister acknowledged a structural gap between academia and industry, citing a longstanding perception within institutions that engagement with profit-making enterprises is undesirable.

He said institutions — both centrally and state-funded — must engage more actively with society and demonstrate the real-world impact of their work. Pradhan highlighted the role of the Anusandhan National Research Foundation as a platform to bridge this divide, alongside the ₹1 trillion Research, Development and Innovation (RDI) fund.

These initiatives, he said, are designed to connect industry, research institutions and startups, and to enable more collaborative innovation.

NCERT clears revised book after judiciary row

AUHONA MUKHERJEE
New Delhi, 5 May

The Centre has revised the Class 8 social science textbook that was withdrawn earlier this year following concerns over a section on judicial corruption. The updated edition is likely to be released within a week, according to two people aware of the matter.

The revised textbook has received clearance from an expert committee constituted by the National Council of Educational Research and Training (NCERT). Changes were made after a review of the contentious chapter on the judiciary. The Centre had earlier informed the Supreme Court (SC) that a three-member committee had been formed to rewrite the chapter. The panel was tasked with revising the content to ensure it is appropriate for students.

The controversy began after the NCERT textbook included references to judicial corruption, prompting objections over how the issue was presented to middle-school students. The matter reached the SC through petitions arguing that the framing was inappropriate for the age group and could undermine confidence in institutions.

The Centre told the SC that the panel would review and rewrite the chapter. The textbook was later withdrawn, and the panel examined the language, examples and overall presentation to ensure it remained pedagogically appropriate.
